In an exclusive Kindle Singles Interview, Darren Star -- the creator of the hit series “Beverly Hills, 90210,” “Melrose Place” and “Sex and the City” -- delivers a rare, riveting account of his storied Hollywood career. For the first time, Star reveals his frustrations with the misguided rom-com wrap-up of “Sex and the City” that he felt betrayed his vision; his opposition to Fox studio chief Barry Diller’s desire to name his TV series about Beverly Hills teenagers after a zip code, and his annoyance when WB Network executives forced him to fire an then-unknown Amy Adams from a TV pilot. By turns modest and mordant, Star opens up over lunch about his years as one of TV’s most successful writer-producers, and his extraordinary experiences behind the camera.

The interview was conducted by David Blum, who works for Amazon as the editor of Kindle Singles. Blum began his career as a staff reporter for The Wall Street Journal, and has been the editor-in-chief of The Village Voice, the New York Press and 02138 Magazine. He was previously a writer and editor at The New York Times Magazine, and a contributing editor at New York and Esquire magazines. He has written two books: "Flash in the Pan: The Life and Death of an American Restaurant" (1992), and "Tick...Tick...Tick...: The Long Life & Turbulent Times of 60 Minutes" (2004).
