Improvise for Real David Reed

Improvise for Real is a way of studying and creating music that is both fascinating and addictive. Already being used by musicians in more than 20 countries, the method empowers you to learn through your own creative explorations.

Instead of giving you "licks" and formulas to use in your solos, David Reed takes you into the beautiful world of modern harmony and shows you how music really works. You will learn to understand music from the inside out and to recognize the sounds in the music all around you. You will learn to improvise over jazz standards, blues songs, pop music or any other style you would like to play. And you will learn to play YOUR music, expressing yourself with complete confidence in any musical situation.

The method is open to all instruments and all ability levels. You do not need to know anything at all about music theory to begin, and there is no sight reading required. The exercises are easy to understand and fun to practice. For many people, Improvise for Real is the key that enabled them to finally understand harmony and to really enjoy improvising.
